Contrasting emergency remote learning and online learning

When physical schools closed and districts seemed to teaching primarily via live video, many districts said that these schools were now online.

But emergency remote learning is not the same as online learning.

EMERGENCY

VS

ONLINE LEARNING

Implemented with little planning by necessity

Planned for months if not years

Temporary

Short- or long-term

For all classes

For any number of classes, from one to all

For most if not all students in a district

For a small subset of students

For most if not all teachers

For a subset of a set of teachers

Little to no onboarding

Extensive and often standardized onboarding

Mostly synchronous, group classes

Asynchronous, individualized learning

Limited onboarding processes for students

Extensive and often standardized onboarding for new students

Coursework delivered to full class

Teachers often personalize learning for each student
